The Biggest Problem with Social Media Marketing on Facebook

It has become a challenge for experts, authors, coaches, healers and speakers to build an audience on Social Media. We all have a very important message that we want to share with an active audience.

Our posts on Facebook, are now seen on average by 2 to 5 percent of our audience.

We are very active on our Facebook and have noticed the following trends:

- It has become increasingly difficult to reach people and build your audience
- Getting likes, comments, and shares from genuinely interested people is nearly impossible without a strategy in place
- Nothing screams lack of credibility as much as 1 or 2 likes on your meaningful post

Why Is This Happening?

It's very simple. With such an abundance of content, these Social Media Platforms need to prioritize what we see in our newsfeed or inbox.

To prioritize effectively, these sites must evaluate posts, determine their importance; and then show us the posts that they feel are appropriate or important.

A post with very few likes, comments, shares and meaningful engagement isn't going to get be highly prioritized and will not be shown to everyone. Posts with more engagement will automatically get in front of a larger audience. Just as success breeds more success, engagement breeds more engagement.

Without engagement on your page, you'll have little visibility, limited credibility, and virtually no authority.

A Cheap Solution

Many people already know that more likes, comments, and shares are a good way to make you look credible. A whole industry has sprouted up to take advantage of this need.

This type of “automated or fake” solution can be detected. If you are caught, they will penalize you.

Buying phantom likes, comments, and shares does not work.

An Expensive Solution

Another alternative is to invest a substantial amount of time and money into Social Media Advertising. This will absolutely work if you have thousands of dollars to spend every month and the time to make sure you are doing it well.

Without a trusted and experienced in-house Social Media expert, this solution can quickly become quite expensive, yielding little to no ROI.

The Best Solution

A more ideal solution would be to create a small, collaborative network of people that are all active on Facebook and are all in similar, but non-competitive niches.

Once you gather the people in your network, everyone would agree to like and comment on everyone else's posts.

This network of people would ideally be real people with a real interest in your posts. They will also have a real commitment to helping you in exchange for you helping them.

Once everyone gets involved your posts will reach more people organically, leading to more engagement, which will produce more business.

This type of solution, if implemented correctly, will launch you to an entirely new level on social media. Or as we say, you'll become a Social Media Mogul!

That's exactly why we designed our Social Media Mogul Club

Is It the Best Solution?

The 'Best Solution' above is the optimal choice, but there are a few challenges that immediately arise with this solution.

1. Where do you find these 10+ real people in your niche to work with?
2. How do you easily reach out to them and request their participation?
3. How do you regularly notify them of your posts so they can like and comment on a regular and consistent basis?
4. How do you monitor their engagement so they continue to like and comment on your posts?

5. How do you replace them when 1, 2 or all 10 of them stop their activity?

That's why we created our
